DIVERSIFIED FARMING IS THE KEY TO PROSPERITY

We have heard men grown old in the practice of agriculture say that a one-crop country never did and never will amount to anything. Logic and the "book farmers" bear them out in this, for it is evident that the fortunes of a one-crop country go up and down with every whim of climate, market or other factor. Stability cannot rest on quicksand. By diversification in crops and animal products enough props are put under the structure so that it will stand if one or two of them become badly bent.

For many years Malheur county has been practically a one-crop county. That crop is alfalfa hay. The market has come from the needs of livestock ranged in the interior counties during the summer and brought to the alfalfa sections in the winter. Owing to crop failure in other parts of this and neighboring states and the increased demand for feed because of war conditions, the market for hay has been good in recent years. To reach this market, however no inconsiderable amount of baled hay was shipped last year and the year before.

But let us take a look at prospective supplies of hay and the demand for it as indicative of the county's future prosperity. Everyone knows that there is as much hay as there ever has been in our own county and great quantities of it tied up by quarantine in our neighboring State. There is no serious crop failure this year where we sold hay last. On the other hand, the quantity of livestock is reported by the Department of Agriculture as considerably reduced. Financial institutions tell us that the buying power of the stock man is on the blink. It looks as if we had toward diversification to increase the variety of saleable products.

SIXTY CHILDREN AIDED

BY U. OF O. MEDICS
UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, October 11, (Special) — The circulation of University of Oregon library books from January to June of the present year was 100,302. The library now has a total of 100,700 volumes.

Forty-four members of last June's graduating class of the University of Oregon are now teaching in Oregon, the women mostly in the high schools, and many of the men as principals and superintendents.

B. O. Garrett, who was graduated last June from the school of business administration of the University of Oregon, is serving as secretary of the McMinnville chamber of Commerce. At the University he was president of the student chamber of commerce.

Under the crippled children's law, the University of Oregon medical school has given free surgical attention to more than sixty crippled children of the state.

Dr. H. D. Sheldon, dean of the University of Oregon school of education, will make an address before the State Teachers Association at Portland during the Christmas holidays on "The Life and Service of J. H. Ackerman."

According to an announcement of the school of music of the University of Oregon, the number of public school of music of the University of Oregon, the number of public school music teachers graduated last year is not sufficient to supply the demand in the state of music supervisors.
